

Promoting a School Organization with Microsoft Publisher

Lesson Objectives

- ✓ Understand the types of materials used in marketing.
- ✓ Understand the general layout of a brochure.
- ✓ Create a set of promotional materials using Publication by Design Wizards:
 - Create a brochure.
 - Create a letterhead and envelope.
 - Create a Thank You card.

You and your students, along with the environmental club, have chosen to help raise funds for the Free Willy Keiko Foundation in order to help maintain Keiko's environment. Promoting fundraising activities helps you tell people about students' involvement and progress. Starting with a Design Set, you'll create promotional materials for your fundraiser, all with a consistent look and feel, and then add a logo using the Logo Creation Wizard.

A brochure informs potential donors about the cause your students are promoting, when and where funds will be collected, and how they will be used. Letterhead and envelopes give your organization a polished look when sending informational letters to community members. Thank you cards inform donors of your appreciation for their help and can also update donors regarding your fundraising goal.

Pre-publishing Activities

- Brainstorm student activities that could benefit from promotional materials. Encourage students to think about services they offer (baby-sitting, lawn care, or tutoring).
- Discuss the value of letterhead and brochures in marketing a product or service.
- Have students collect business cards, business stationery, and brochures. Discuss what makes pieces effective. How do the typography and the layout add to the visual interest?
- Discuss the difference between language used to inform and language used to persuade.
- Write a formal business letter informing local businesses of your upcoming fundraiser or asking for donated materials for a fundraising activity.
- Have students discuss how to plan the writing of their brochures. What message should be conveyed? How much space should they devote to informing people about Keiko and how much space should be dedicated to raising funds? What should the tone be? How can students best convey this through words and pictures?
- Determine appropriate visual images and words to create headlines and slogans.
- Use descriptive writing with the appropriate tone to create text for the brochure.
- Write the text for thank you cards.

Personalize It

You can add any logo to your publications. If you already have an electronic file of your school or organization logo, you can place it anywhere as a graphic. If you have a paper copy of your logo, you can scan the logo and place it in your publication. See the "Creating a Newsletter" lesson in this guide for more information about placing scanned images into your publications.

When you print your cards or brochures, use some of the specialty papers available at office supply stores. With colored stock and your black-and-white or color printer, it's easy to create professional-looking stationery.

You can even go back to the publications you have created and change the design, color scheme, logo, style, and purpose. Once you have created a design using a wizard, you can always use the wizard to redesign a publication.

More Ideas

- Give students real-world experiences by involving students in the printing costs, paper choices, and all of the design elements.
- Brochures inform and persuade long after the initial meeting with someone in person. Both business cards and brochures create a professional image between school clubs and the community.
- As a faculty advisor for a student club, help the club create promotional materials for a membership campaign or club activity.
- Create a student-run business, complete with business cards, letterhead, and promotional flyers. Students can build organizational skills by promoting a babysitting or lawn care service or by baking brownies for students to eat at lunch. Give students different responsibilities based on the business needs, just like a real business would.
- Create brochures for concerts or plays that let community members know who is participating, the preparations involved, the highlights, and cost of the production.
- Encourage students to team up with non-profit, charity, or community organizations to promote a drive or event.
- Use the Publications by Design tab to create business cards and flyers for your fundraiser that have the same look and feel as the publications you have already created.
- Organize a canned food drive, coats for kids, books for the public library, or other service activity. Create promotional materials that advertise and inform.
